

All my own work

by artist Colette

THINGS move fast in the trendy world of the arts. Last week brick piles were the rage. This week it's living art.

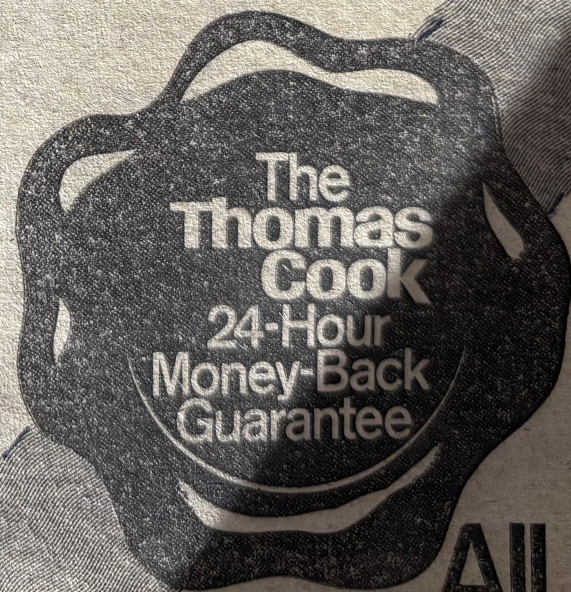

Artist Colette, pictured above, shows how it's done at a New York gallery. She takes off her clothes and lies down in a "frame" made of silk, satin and mirrors.

Two more artists, Lil Picard and Kathy Acker, give a performance entitled "Drinking and Spitting." Lil gives Kathy things to drink, and she spits them out.

Or there's Mitch Corber's little masterpiece called "Reciting Poetry under the Influence of Onions." He reads aloud while he sniffs onions which make him cry.

They call it performance art, and they say it's an attempt to make art intelligible to the masses. Playing to the gallery, as it were.
